Live Stream // Fever Dream will explore the submission to the ritual of media in the era of Trump. At the event, various emerging New York artists react to the submission to and worship of media—which is changing the face of fact, opinion, and self-expression. The event will represent the diverse ideas of over 30 artists—a reflection of the expanded and scattered sources of information brought about by the internet era and its use in political and social thought.

Live Stream // Fever Dream will be an immersive night featuring live performances, installations, film screenings, music, and much more. By allowing artists to explore the concept across multiple different media and art forms, the event will create a church to the sensation of submission and worship, encouraging viewers to worship alongside the artists: to feel what they feel. The event will take place at the Gowanus Ballroom, a large former cannonball factory.

Founded in May of 2017, Hidden Currencies is an art collective that operates under the following three tenets:

- (1) To form an interdisciplinary creative community that prompts artists to explore new dimensions of their art through critiques, demonstrations, and workshops. Artists of different mediums give valuable feedback that will stem from various backgrounds.
- (2) To create a network of individuals in the face of a climate that commoditizes art, music, and performance. It is important to create a network of individuals who can hold each other accountable to their personal ethical standards of making art. The community facilitates growth outside of what could be attained independently.
- (3) To work with local communities to establish a connecting point for the next generation to engage with art in a variety of mediums.
